Metacycling Art: More than a new Trend

- Metacycling Art derives from high-level life cycles: a seed becomes a tree, a tree becomes wood, that is used to build a boat. As it ages, the boat's useful life comes to a close and eventually it becomes scrap and waste, and it is reclaimed through a recycling process, to become a work of art.

- According to the principle of Japanese "Kaizen" a work of art contains the compressed energy of the historical processes of matter used to make it. In this way
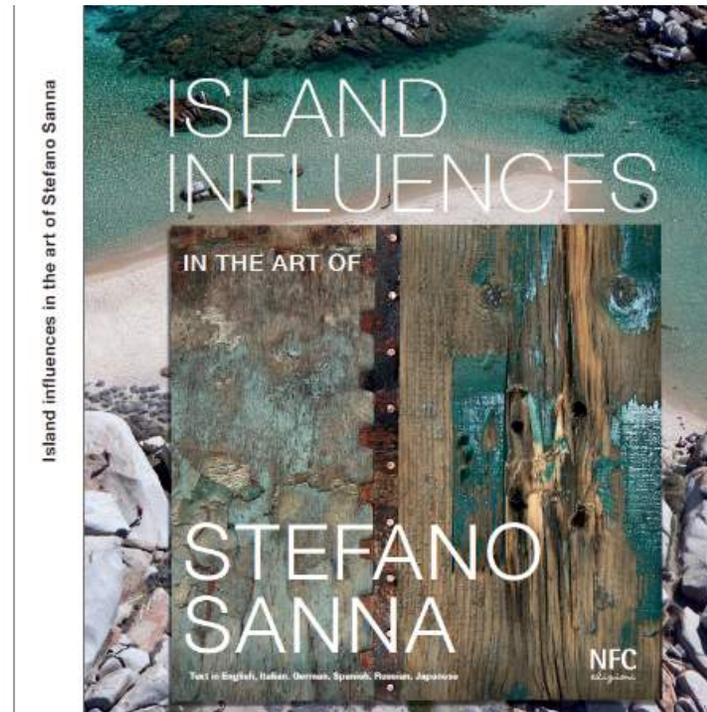

Metacycling Art and „green" Movement

- Metacycling Art defines an innovative "green" movement as a new dimension of contemporary art. Through this new movement, artists like Stefano Sanna, hector Adalid and Juergen Kuhl express new ways to document their concern about the environment. They encourage mankind to recycle materials for a better future and sensible reuse of waste like driftwood and other natural trash.
